CALL FOR VOLUNTEER EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

OSLA's official magazine, The Teaching Librarian, seeks a new Editor-in-Chief to manage the upcoming January 2024 issue. If you're interested in serving as the leader of this print publication while overseeing the editorial board, this could be the perfect opportunity for you!

The Teaching Librarian is published three times a year in tandem with the seasons of a regular school year. The Editor-in-Chief supports OSLA initiatives, hosts Editorial Board meetings, solicits meaningful articles from industry professionals, and more.

Time commitment in this role can vary and can be expected to be busier in the weeks leading up to the date of publication. The role requires the following qualifications:

- Familiarity with the school library/teaching world (current issues, trends and challenges).
- Strong editing and writing skills.
- Knowledge or experience working with print publications.

Applications can be sent to theteachinglibrarian@outlook.com by September 15. Please include:

- Current or previous school library work.
- Current or previous editing or writing work.
- Why you would like to lead The Teaching Librarian.

Please be sure to include your name, school board and contact information along with your application. You will then receive a short assignment to complete.

A detailed list of expectations and duties is available upon request. In support of a smooth transition, we're pleased to share that the current Editor-in-Chief will be available for guidance.
